About

Who Here?™ is the ultimate group party game for learning what others really think of you, and what you really think of others! Players take turns being the 'judge' and assigning cards to other players based on who he/she thinks the card best applies.

Objective

Collect 'who here?' cards, be the first player to collect enough cards to win, and earn the title of 'supreme galactic champion' of the party.

Preparation

- Determine how many cards it takes to win
- Choose a player to be the first judge

Gameplay

The first judge selects any card from the deck, reads it aloud (beginning with the phrase 'who here'), and gives the card to whomever he/she thinks the card best applies to. Players are encouraged to state reasons/examples why the card best applies to them. The judge cannot assign the card to themselves. Game play moves clockwise, with the next player becoming the judge for the next hand.

Winning the game

The game continues until a player has collected a specific number of cards (for example five).

 The number of cards needed to win can be modified to accommodate number of players and length of gameplay.

Game modifiers (optional)

- Pull the audience: give players a chance to prove why they deserve the card
- First impressions: assign the card without player input (and explain why they get it)
- Inversion: assign the card to the least applicable player
- Full deck: play until the deck is gone; the player with the most cards wins!
- No partners: Players are barred from assigning cards to their partner/significant other
- Shenanigans rule: If a player disagrees with the Judge's assignment, he/she can call 'shenanigans' and protest. If at least two-thirds of the players believe the card was assigned incorrectly AND agree who the card should be assigned to, the agreed upon player gets the card.
